- Produce research, both quantitative and qualitative, using public and proprietary data sources and by leveraging credible sources
- Act as a self-starter, have the ability to work on parallel tasks while maintaining attention to detail
- Communicate clearly and concisely in written and oral formats; presents information and insights with clarity
- Collaborate with high degree of professionalism with colleagues and clients from different countries, showing signs of driving for ownership of team deliverables
- Manage expectations on delivery, commits to deadlines and / or raises issues early to avoid surprises
- Understand a client's organisational structure, business environment, operating model and industry context, through guided research;

Persistence in finding relevant data to reconcile disparate information to structure analyses

- Start to build up and own client relationships for themselves, understanding their issues and what needs to be done for them to be successful
- Actively support the development of the practice and in wider activities to promote company branding externally

You'll need to have:

- Strategic thinking and problem solving skills
- Intellectual capacity and curiosity to understand complex issues, and in asking the right questions to help articulate possible solutions
- Proven track record of delivering high quality work with an attention to detail
- Ability to adapt to changing conditions and effective time management
- Communications and interpersonal skills
- Strong client & stakeholder engagement

We'd love to see (Optional):

- Higher education qualifications from reputable universities in the UK, Europe or the US.
- Key position of responsibilities at the university
- Evidence in active interests in consulting industry or in one of the priority areas (NZST / GHLS / DTNI)
